Hip Hop activist Rosa Clemente, a member of the Malcolm X Grassroots Movement, Black August and The Hip-Hop Caucus; long-time political organizer Angela Woodson, co-chair of the first-ever National Hip-Hop Political Convention in 2004 and director of Faith-based Initiatives for the Ohio Governor's Office; and hip-hop artist M-1, one half of the innovative hip-hop / rap duo dead prez – will be at Fairfield University's John A. Barone Campus Center in Connecticut on Wednesday, March 12 at 8 p.m.

The hip hop activists and notables will be part of a national tour that is led by hip hop political activists that focuses on hip-hop, youth civic participation and the 2008 Presidential Campaign,

Fairfield University in Connecticut is the only stop on the East Coast, other than Boston, for the third annual national discussion tour. Admission is free.

The moderator for the panel will be Bakari Kitwana, the executive director of Rap Sessions and the author of "The Hip-Hop Generation," who says, "The 2008 Presidential Election is the most important election of this generation's lifetime." The goal of the tour, he says, "is to educate youth on their civic rights and responsibilities, and equally important, to help young voters understand ways to place their issues on the national agenda."

Kitwana adds, "The hip-hop voting bloc will be a defining factor in 2008. We want to be sure that our young people are informed on exactly what's at stake for the hip-hop generation and not be lulled to sleep by the hype of gender, race or simply voting for voting's sake."
